CHINESE STUDIES OPTION...

Under the rubric of the Third World Studies Programme it is possible, as an alternative to the concentration in Third World Studies described elsewhere, to complete a concentration in Chinese Studies, which will be pursued simultaneously with the student's major or honours programme in one of the existing departments. The requirement for this is completion of at least five courses or their credit equivalent concerned with some aspect of Chinese civilization past or present. At least one course must be in Chinese language, available through the facilities of McGill University.

It is hoped that the option of a concentration in Chinese Studies will help to develop the general awareness of China among students at Loyola, as well as giving some undergraduate preparation to those who may wish to pursue their interest in China at a more advanced level.

COURSES...

The number of courses about China given at Loyola has been steadily increasing in recent years in response to growing demand. While some students may wish, with the exception of the language, to complete their concentration in Chinese Studies exclusively at Loyola, others may choose to avail themselves of courses with Chinese content given elsewhere in Montreal. It is possible to take for credit one course per year at another university without extra cost.

The following courses dealing with China are normally available at Loyola:

History of China (Prof. Porter)
East Asia To-day (Prof. Porter)  $\frac{1}{2}$
Contemporary Politics of China (Dr. Oh)  $\frac{1}{2}$
Asian Communism (Dr. Oh)
Chinese Philosophy (Prof. Cavanaugh)
Chinese Mythology (Prof. Wardy)  $\frac{1}{2}$
The Chinese Economy (Dr. Liu)  $\frac{1}{2}$

For full details of the above see the university calendar.

Université du Québec:

Le chinois (langue) premier palier,
deuxieme palier

China, a nation of eight hundred million, is presently undergoing a process of momentous change. As the Nineteen-Seventies progress, and the fears which until recently have inhibited the study of China gradually diminish, it becomes more possible and more necessary to reach a better understanding of China's great tradition and her aspirations for the future. The Chinese Studies concentration was designed to co-ordinate course offerings on China at Loyola, and to encourage students to supplement their principal disciplinary programme with an interdisciplinary look at this unique civilization.
